Royal Cabinet Company Receives Environmental Stewardship Certification

Hillsborough, NJ – December 6, 2007 – New Jersey-based cabinet manufacturer Royal Cabinet Company recently received certification in the Environmental Stewardship Program accredited by the Kitchen Cabinet Manufacturer’s Association (KCMA).

Introduced in 2006, KCMA's Environmental Stewardship Program was created as a means of recognizing industry manufacturers who use ecologically sound materials and practice environmentally friendly manufacturing processes.

In order to qualify for the ESP certification, manufacturers must achieve compliance in five categories, including air quality, product resource management, process resource management, environmental stewardship, and community relations. Once certified, manufacturers are evaluated annually to maintain certification credentials.

As a result of this prestigious certification, Royal Cabinet Company is proud to announce the introduction of New Leaf Cabinetry. New Leaf is Royal’s environmentally sound line of custom cabinets.

Royal Cabinet Company President and Owner Paul McDonald said, “Although we have always maintained an environmentally conscious team, the ESP certification and the debut of the New Leaf line exemplifies our commitment to a healthier community, and future. We are proud of this certification and our company’s dedication to practicing sustainable forestry, improving air quality, conserving energy, and reducing waste throughout our manufacturing process.”

Founded in 1962, Royal Cabinet Company designs and creates some of America’s finest cabinetry and woodworking creations. With custom designs for any room in the home, Royal Cabinet Company specializes in transforming homes into unique showplaces that reflect the lifestyle of the homeowner.

Royal Cabinet Company is located in Hillsborough, New Jersey, with dealers in ten states throughout New Jersey, the East Coast and Midwest.
